

REMARKS

As amended, claim 1, for example, provides a method for composing sentences from sentence portions which are provided as audible options. The user can compose a sentence by making key selections to select from among the audible sentence portion options.

None of the cited references in any way relate to the composition of a sentence. Evans, for example, merely is a data entry form in which pieces of data may be selected to identify an appointment. However, there is no effort to provide portions of a sentence and to enable the selection of sentence portions that are offered audibly.

Therefore, claim 1, as amended, should be patentably distinguishable and the other claims, likewise, should now be allowable.

Respectfully submitted,

Date: May 7, 2004
